The advantage, we think, of a small liberal arts college lies in its increased emphasis on personality. Many are here as a protest to mass-produced education; they prefer names to registration numbers.

But there is more than the specter of IBM facing "individuals." A small community has its own conventions and slots, dictated by a part-laudable, part-habitual social usage. Location has a habit of determining the accident of private notions.

At Middlebury, independence is usually interdependence—from one view a reassuring thing. Another angle wonders which demands the most—the close community or the IBM.

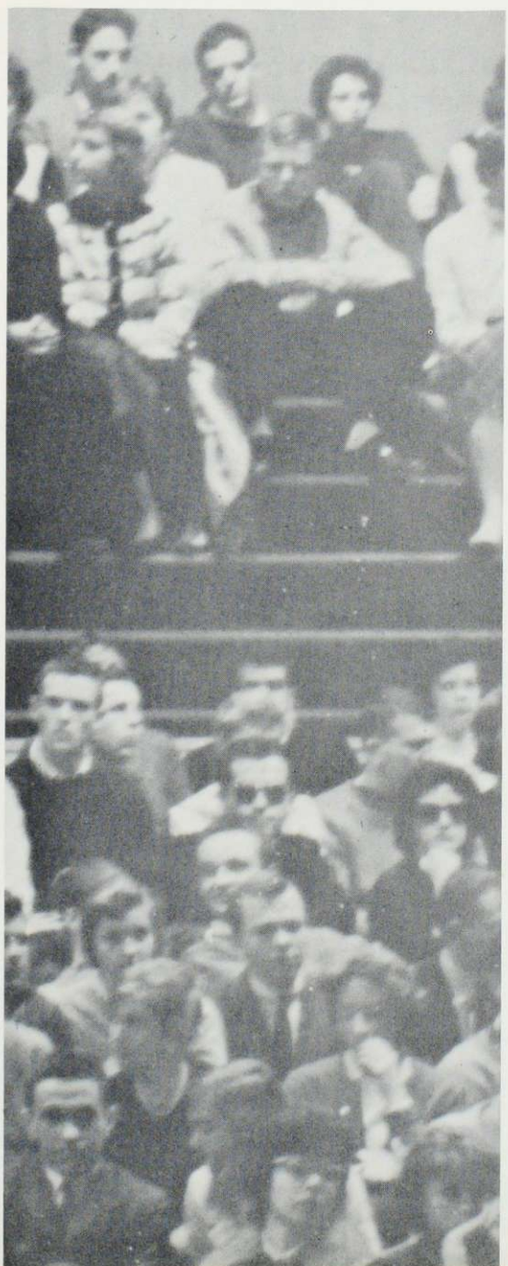
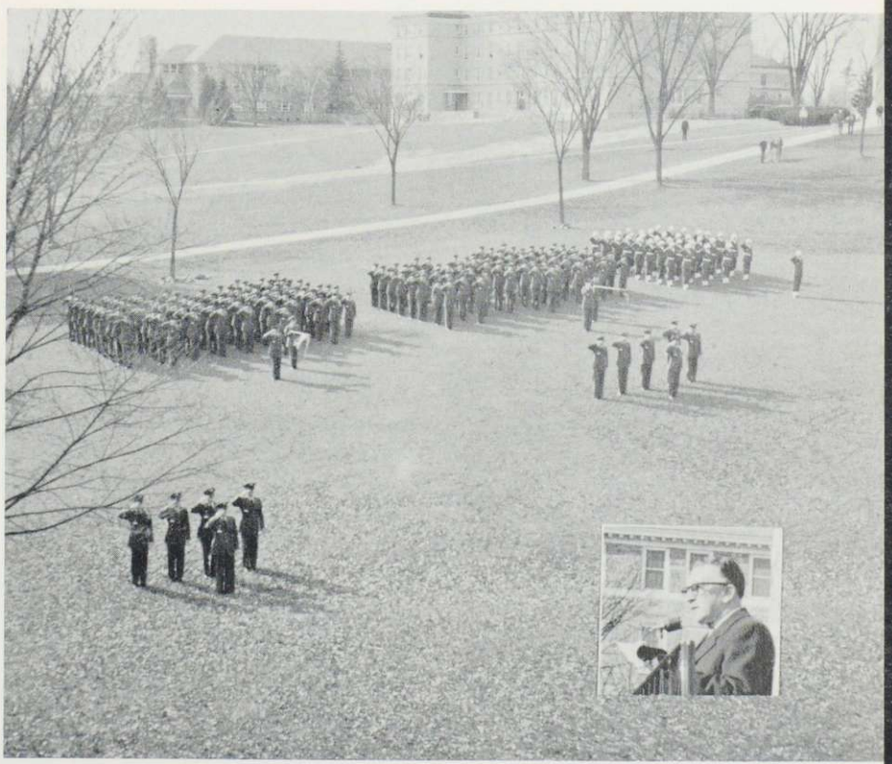
KALEIDOSCOPE

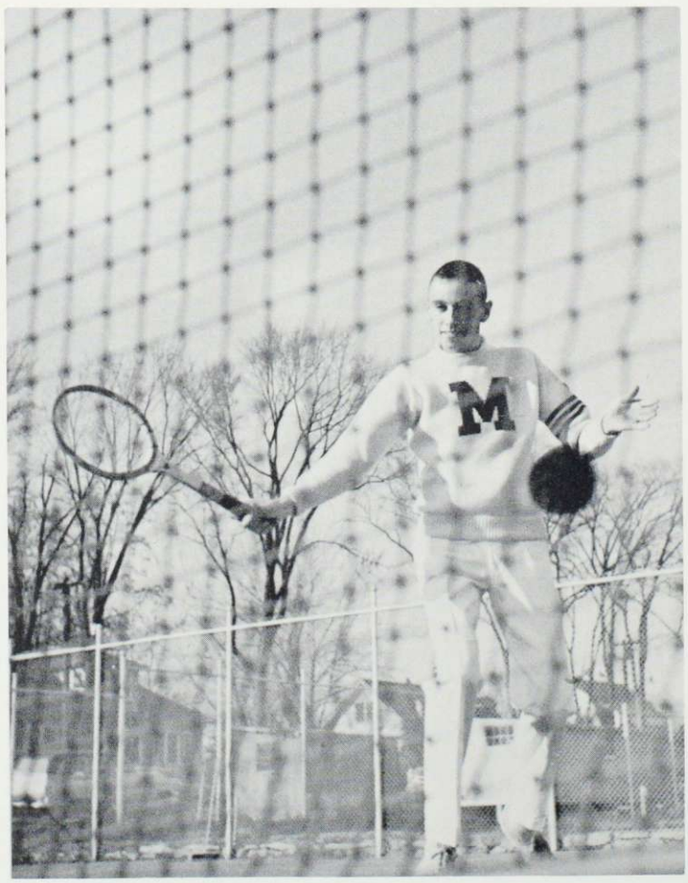
Middlebury College
Middlebury, Vermont



Middlebury, we hear, is a microcosm. Even more, it is a proving ground for life Out There. Neatly organized groups keep this small society in perpetual motion—committees with constitutions and casual neighborhood clumps. In our nice miniature world (thrown always on itself for entertainment and education), group dynamics lead the pack. We vote, obey the law, pay taxes, join clubs, uphold justice, serve, and keep our noses clean—as all community-minded citizens must.

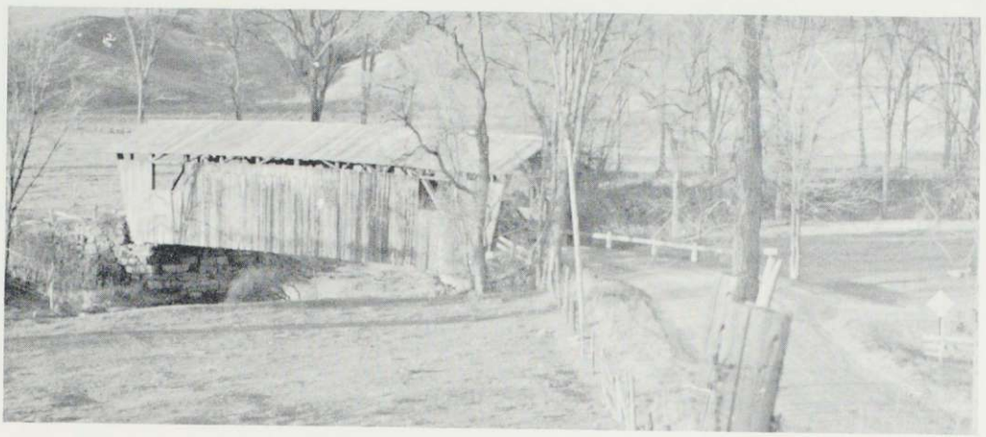
We also sport, now and then, community minds. Middlebury gossips run their appointed paths, pitching in together (as the story says) to keep their school and themselves in running order. A group may be less than the sum of its parts, but the aggregate lesson will serve (Middlebury being a microcosm).

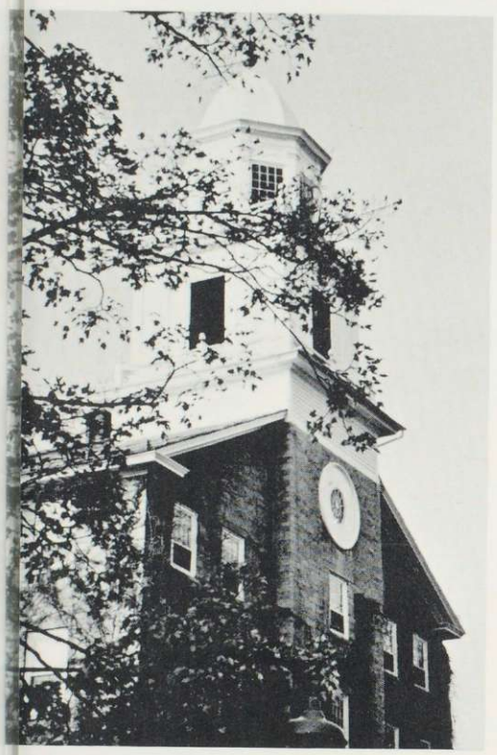




In a microcosm, competition spells teamwork. Organized games, fraternity rushing, junior Weekend Floats—these equal small scale Olympics; the winner is the best oiled machine. An inverse proportion might even be valid: team potential drops as its internal competition increases. No one pretends to carry the game alone.

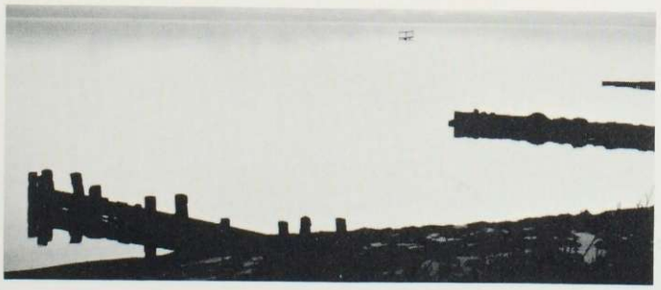
The Winning Way (now and then) pops up in other places—exam grades, gin rummy, clothes closets, cliques, and checkers. Always it is social, grounded on the competitive spirit of friendly (or determined) opposition. It could be the soul of the microcosm (Out There).

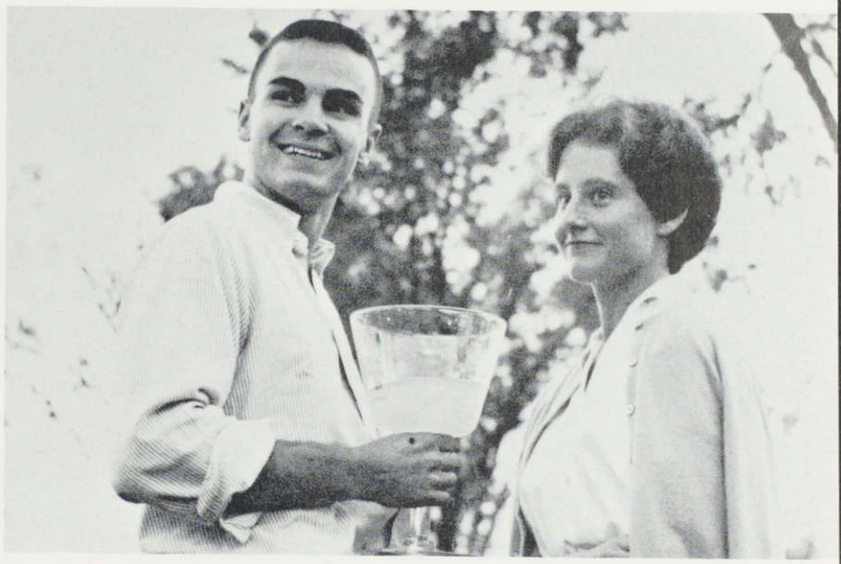




At some points, the Little World is one-sided. Many prefer to vary sunsets with street lights, and lovely nature with downtown. Be this as it may, in the spring and autumn months Vermont almost speaks for herself (however garrulous she might turn in winter).

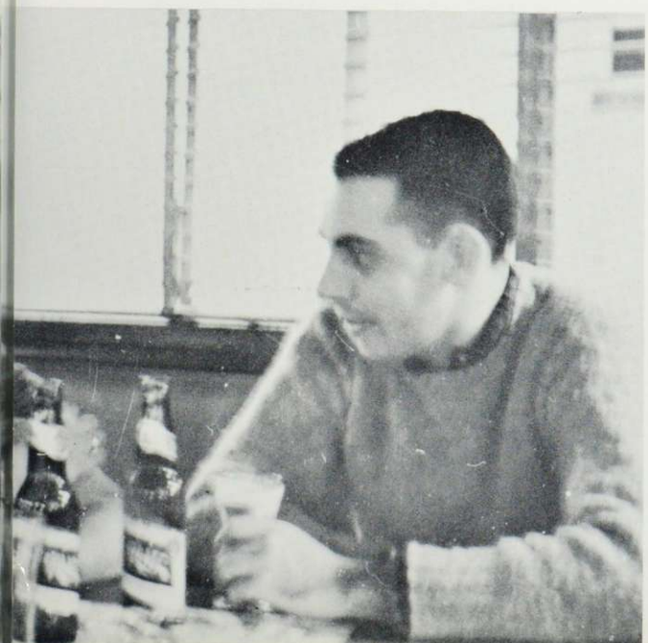
The hills wall in our microcosm and shut out tornadoes. For beauty, Starr Library loses to Camel's Hump; Wright to Moosalamoo; the ice rink to Dunmore. But rural scenes say little as lessons, unless to hint that they can stand alone.





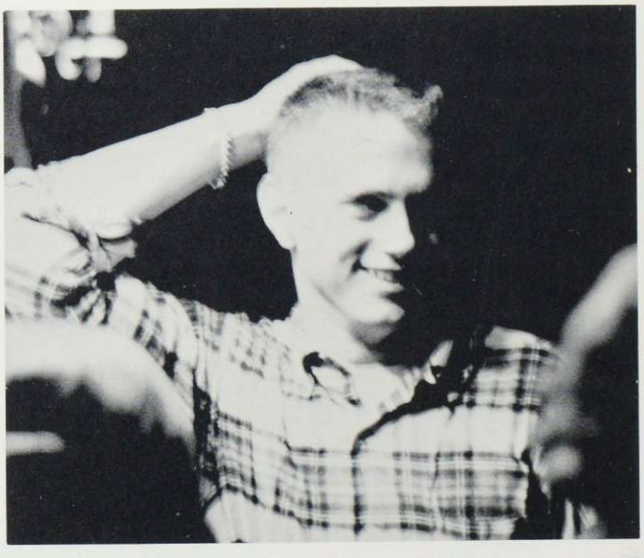
Below the group veneer, we operate in pairs. It's not a rule of thumb, but two more often make sense than twenty (particularly in a microcosm). There are roommates, confidantes, sorors, fraters, sympathizers, allies, alter egos, comrades, fiances, mates, companions, buddies, and side kicks; also acquaintances, and a wide number of more garden variety relationships. ("Friend" is both a platitude and a rarity.)

Two by two, pairs are most common, most difficult, most permanent, and the butt of most jokes. By happy accident, they sometimes add up to more than community property.

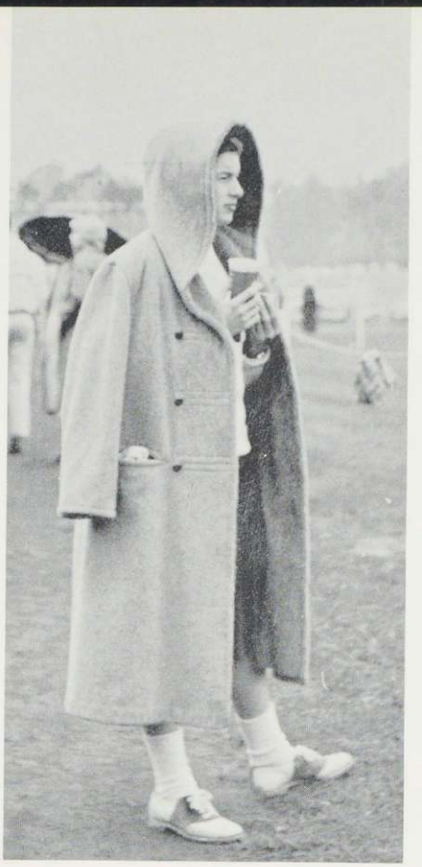


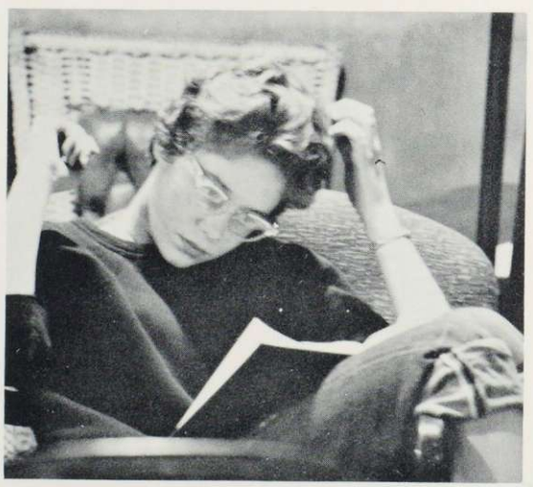
A group dwindles off into busy work. Clichès are the staple of casual conversation. Little worlds demand little niches, and big worlds, a spot in the Infinite Scheme of Things.

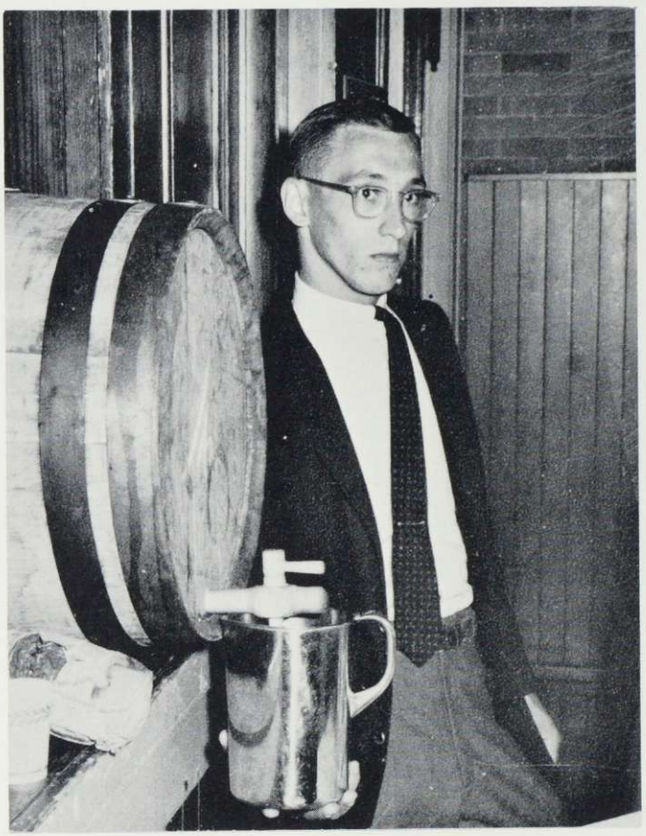
But when a musical comedy pops up unclassified, its success catches the microcosm off guard.

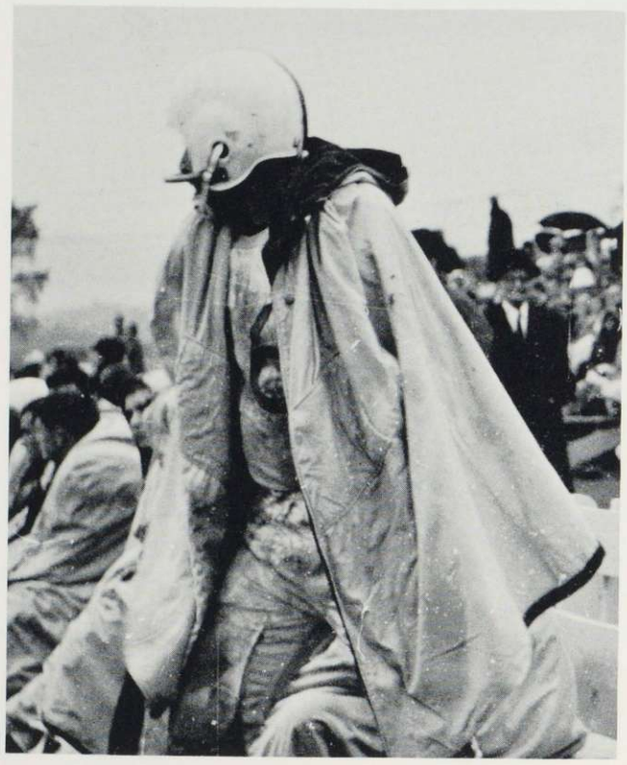


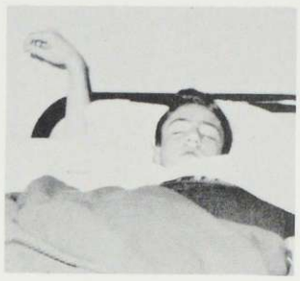
A neighborhood state of mind isn't worth much to private genius (or private tenacity or private nerve). Argue "intellectual atmosphere" into the ground and turn academic design backwards, the thickest block to individual perception is a busy social conscience. Education at its best tends to isolate a little; at its worst it leaves us with answered questions and pleasant adjustment. Neither is too serious, and we can grow out of both.

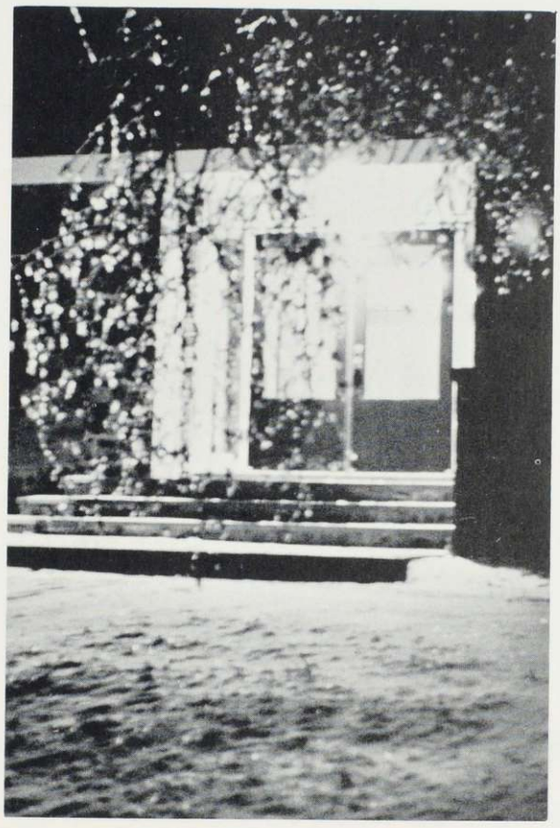












A college diploma, the best people agree, opens doors and opens minds. But the state of the sheepskin's new owner is an interesting unknown. He fits somewhere along a scale, the extremes of which registered determined one-idea men or misty-eyed nostalgics. He has run with groups, with anti-group groups, or skulked on the fringes of both. He carries answered questions, unanswered questions, or no questions at all.

Many an impression (and backlog of judgments) is picked up with his diploma. Next on the agenda: a thought on which segments of this package deal will be of real use.

One of the fascinating things about Middlebury College in recent years has been the rapid growth and development of its intellectual stature. Not content with things as they are, the dedicated men on Middlebury's faculty and administration have been the source of this driving energy to excel. In continually seeking higher standards for their own work and that demanded of their students, they have brought new heights to the college's academic reputation. Students, trustees, faculty and administration all share in the exciting task of bringing Middlebury's particular scholastic contribution to new importance in a new age.

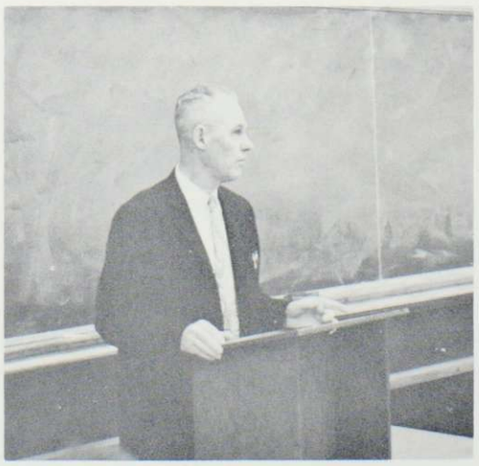
The Records of Man's Exploration

John H. Clagett, English.



Perley C. Perkins, English.

It has always been a fundamental concept that knowledge of man's cultural heritage was the very cornerstone of a liberal arts education. By examining the manifold artistic expressions of many cultures, students have developed an understanding of them and the people who were their creators. Such interest has been, and should continue to be, the major role of the humanities in the great task of peace in our time.

Perhaps despite all the good that has been accomplished by the teaching of the Humanities, an old and more vital approach is necessary. It is most difficult for me to see any difference between the artist in society and the discoverer of a new preventative serum, a designer of banking laws, a creative theologian, or any other contributor to our knowledge and experience. All imaginatively conceive and then bend techniques to a desired aim. Welcoming back the creative artist might do much to reduce the complaint of his escapism and obscurantism.

The Humanities should be taught together and interdependently as records of man's imaginative exploration. If few of the students in this new community become professionals, the entire society is richer for the many who find avocations.

An Awareness of Differences Leads to Understanding

To know two languages is to be two people. Here at Middlebury we have young men and women with personalities so split that it is difficult to determine the real self, for we have students who have delved, in breadth and in depth, into several cultures. This interest in languages has been a part of the tradition of Middlebury, ever since the pioneering work, in the early years of this century, in French, German, and Spanish. With the addition of Italian, then of Russian, and the impulse of Sputnik, the scope has been broadened, and it is likely that the College will embark on new ventures in the area of foreign language studies.

Middlebury is known abroad through its foreign graduate schools, and no small part is played by our students in spreading American culture, and in representing our country throughout Western Europe.

The Search For Social Empiricism

The Social Sciences are the stepchildren of today's curriculum. Everyone knows what the Natural Sciences stand for. The languages, particularly at Middlebury, have a place. The Humanities belong in their pursuit into the innermost recesses of the soul.

But what can possibly be said of the Social Sciences, save that they are together because they belong nowhere else? Economics, Sociology, Psychology tend year by year to a more mathematical approach to problem-solving. We, in Political Science, Contemporary Civilization, and History, sometimes sense that we are the rear-guard in a late nineteenth century attempt to show that all knowledge that is worthwhile must be somehow related to Real Science. Dealing neither with measurable quantities of force nor with inner spirit, we study groups, and then we attempt to make sense of them, reduce them to some kind of pattern. We try, hesitantly, to offer a few tentative predictions on their future behavior.

At our best, we do sometimes hope our suggestions may, some day, serve to help build a cleaner human society. The hope is probably unfounded, but it is what keeps us at our tasks.

Shifting Emphases For Future Demands

Scientific thinking will be demanded of everyone in the years ahead; an awareness of the significance of each major scientific achievement must be common to all. Considered in this light, the purposes and objectives in the teaching of Natural Sciences in a Liberal Arts College are twofold. Prospective scientists must lay the broad foundations for their graduate study and research. For the student not planning a career in science, the basic course must be designed to reveal and to develop an appreciation of "the scientific method" whereby a scientist discovers and verifies his facts.

Tomorrow's demands on the prospective scientist have broadened the base to cut across subject matter lines. A chemist is more properly a bio-chemist, physical chemist, or a geochemist; a physicist is a mathematical physicist, a chemical physicist, a bio- or geophysicist. A shifting of emphases is demanded but the mad scramble for more and better scientists only intensifies the need for greater thoroughness and acquaintance with the many elements. As knowledge in the sciences expands with explosive force, the true function of liberal arts undergraduate training must still consist primarily in the mastery of basic concepts.

Physical Education: Caps vs. Bats

Varsity sports have a definite place at Middlebury, but their place could be much larger. More support from the student body is needed, for teams play their best before enthusiastic spectators. Closer cooperation between the faculty and athletic staff would result in better understanding and better teams. Academic work definitely comes first, but why must it at times hinder athletics, particularly away games? Our staff of four full-time coaches for a ten sport Varsity program is the smallest in New England, but produces excellent results. The results are more than satisfactory when one considers the fact that daily practice is not compulsory due to the conflict with classes.

Lest we forget.

Puzzle pieces.

That Middlebury's ROTC unit favors compulsory military training is hardly surprising.

First of all, Middlebury's ROTC is not now a course in mechanical skills. Teaching history, and an understanding of the military in the modern world contributes to an understanding of the present term "U.S. citizenship" and its obligations.

Admittedly, being a captive audience has its disadvantages, in that many students, because of this compulsion, fail to take advantage of all that the course offers.

However, our army draws two-thirds of its officers from ROTC. If the program were not required, the corps could probably not afford to be selective. This would be a loss, not only to the army, but to all of us.

Courses in Home Economics should be made available to young women in all colleges. These young women are cut off from taking such courses at the high school level, because the required courses for college entrance leave no extra room in their schedules. Should they also be deprived of such an opportunity at the college level?

Elective courses in Home Economics are needed which will be credited toward a degree, and which will make her approach the problems of homemaking with confidence and serenity.

Government—Caught by Committeeism

Last year the UA, egged on by the Campus, made a move to consolidate the disorganized rash of independent committeeism plaguing student government. IFC resisted, yet many other less powerful groups did find themselves quietly absorbed by the central authority.

Contrary to expectations, government this year has once again succumbed to centrifugal force. The comparative strength of MUA and IFC seems to depend on who has the earliest elections, thereby gaining the strongest men. WUA is inevitably bound by the red tape of women's rules, although working (again) to eke a good freshman handbook out of the administration is to their credit. Too, UA's investigation into the Community Chest spectacular hit an overblown nerve center.

But actually not many people care which way the rope is pulled. It takes time, effort and support to change the drift of things, and too many students ask whether (except for efficient running of little things) a strong government would exert any more real force on the student situation than a weak government.

An Old Problem, A New Proposal

The objective of the SEPC is to give "judicious, constant, and long term consideration to the primary educational ends of Middlebury College." In accordance with this purpose, and spurred by the proposal of the FEPC, the committee faced its new challenge with enthusiasm. Thoroughy impressed by the striking innovations of the plan, the SEPC investigated its many facets through meetings highlighted by vigorous discussion and inquiry. The result of this investigation was a questionnaire to determine how the Middlebury student spends his time under the present system.

While planning this questionnaire, the committee was actively engaged in contributing to and hearing from the CAMPUS—a productive if somewhat heated exchange. During the Spring semester, the SEPC interpreted these questionnaires in the light of present and proposed educational policy.

Delineating Bounds Within Justice

The Judicial Councils are the supreme court of the honor system and have the task of sentencing or acquitting self-reported violators. However, in the case of violators who do not report themselves, the Council's proper function is open to question. An honor system presupposes no executive body, but the system apparently cannot operate effectively without some enforcement. The Councils may act as an enforcement agency when a known, or strongly suspected, violator of the rules does not report himself. This is inconsistent with the ideals of an honor system, but until all students accept the personal responsibility inherent in such a system, this unpleasant function of the Judicial Councils seems unavoidable.

The Heart of the Matter

Jacques Barzun, in "The House of Intellect," identifies unconsidered philanthropy as one of the three chief enemies of intellect in America. The implication is that the emotional commitment required of the individual who actively involves himself in bettering the human condition destroys the objective clarity of his intellectual perspective. If Middlebury were devoted only to the development of the intellect, Women's Forum could not exist, much less flourish.

Yet it does. If it is, as Barzun has suggested, logically opposed to the intellect, it is pragmatically its complement. The act of the heart is as much a part of humanity as the Humanities themselves.

The Official Counsellor: Advisor or Prop?

Counselors to the freshmen stand half way between the students and the administration. Their problem is setting up an effective system of confidential advisorship while hampered by their roles as disciplinary proctors and house presidents. Also, it is hard to estimate just how far an untrained advisor can, or should, go in dealing with personal problems.

Another source of trouble sometimes comes from the personality or academic difficulties of the counselor himself. In insisting on equal sorority representation in the women's dorms, better qualified students are passed over for the sake of "fairness to all" (spelled "equal rushing chances.") Still, the system is a solid one, and in the men's dorms, long overdue.

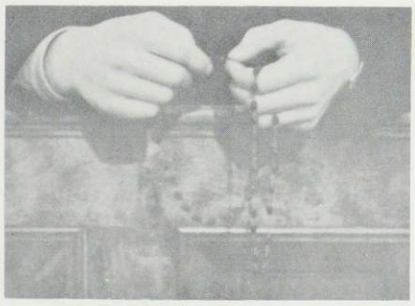
Religion—Effective Disorganization



At the end of last year, congressional subcommitteeism was rivaled only by that of the Christian Association. As with any long established institution, religion at Middlebury was organization-ridden—and too caught up with "doing" something to worry about "being" anything. Meanwhile, the smaller memberships of Canterbury Club, Newman Club, and Hillel were quietly pursuing their program of discussions, religious fellowship and social activities.

This year, the Association has reassessed itself. Less committeeitis and decreased publicity reflect a dropping interest in the Card-carrying Christian, more attention to warmth of atmosphere and religious communion.

Creeping Apathy: An Internal War

FRONTIERS EDITORS. Clark, Tuttle.

The only thing that can kill a communications industry is apathy, not among its staffers, but from the audience it serves.

Here, the broadcast or printed word is designed to report the activities of the student body, supply it with entertainment and give it the means by which to express itself. These interests find general support in the policies of all four groups, always interested (sometimes militantly) in sparking a healthy controversy or making a few more converts.

An organ of public opinion thrives only on the discriminating enthusiasm or criticism of its avowed friends and enemies. But it can be, and too often is, attacked from within. A staff that lacks the capacity to see itself in perspective and apply intelligent self-criticism will undermine any audience, no matter how willing.

Seldom still life.

The basis of the editorial policy of the CAMPUS lies in the needs and interests of the student body. The Middlebury College newspaper aims to bring to its readers the latest news, an enduring record, reflections of opinion and lesser-known aspects of the College community.

Editorials, while attempting to combine constructive suggestions with timely criticism, are based upon the available facts and judgment of the three-member editorial board.

News stories impartially present the most accurate and pertinent facts available. Significance to the College as a whole governs their selection and placement.

CAMPUS Editorial Board

A yearbook editor is hard pressed to say just why she's around. We are uninterested in tradition, mementoes or reference books, and stand reasonably convinced that the children of graduating seniors will be less than impressed by this relic of the past.

Because the Kaleid is glanced through chiefly for its pictures, we aim for reasonably well produced photographs of a representative nature.

But this is still a book, an illustrated text. Our most important job is to have something to say about this business of college living and then embody the idea in a literary pictorial form.

Jane Bryant
Kaleidoscope Editor

A literary magazine is the impetus and means of expression for the potential writer. It should attempt to present to the campus material which will interest the greatest number of students, without overstepping the bounds of literary integrity. It should also attempt to establish a fair criterion for judgment based on what appears to be an acceptable meeting point between overall interest and good literature. It must also be remembered by both the staff and the student body that a literary magazine is merely a reflection on, and of, the student body, not the group that puts it together.

Lincoln Clark
Frontiers Editor

If Middlebury is a microcosm, WRMC has the problems of CBS and more. Radio Middlebury College conceives of its function as threefold—to entertain, to educate, and to serve as an outlet for interest in the broadcasting medium.

Each of these tasks must be undertaken with an eye to the heterogeneous interests of its listening audience and participating members. In programming clasical, jazz, and folk music—from Palestrina to the Coasters—as well as reporting local and national news, the college radio station attempts to offer diverse selection of presentations to a diverse audience.

Beyond These Mountains; Within These Walls

Four organizations exist on the campus for the expressed purpose of stimulating interest in problems outside the limits of Middlebury, Vermont. These four groups—Debators, International Relations Club, Young Democrats, and Young Republicans—have a problem in responsibility.

Our self-enforced isolation necessitates a personal attempt to "keep in touch" with reality. The individual must make the attempt, but organizations designed for fast interplay of ideas and activities make the job easier. Yet the core of each group is the curiosity of the individual. Without it, an organization is a flaccid parody of Madison Avenue.

Organization does not have to be a dirty word. In concentrating the energy born of the curiosity of even a few individuals, a public spirit-minded group can be a gadfly in the true Socratic style.

Adjusting to a new milieu is usually confusing, often traumatic. With the still young addition of Wright Memorial Theater to our collection of gray limestone, drama at Middlebury has found itself subject to both confusion and trauma. At the core of dramatic production is Players, upon which falls the brunt of criticism as well as acclaim.

In attempting to present theater of an experimental nature, the Players have explored and utilized theatrical arts which their new surroundings have made possible. In expressing the desire to produce experimental theater, Players has demonstrated the commendable attitude which resulted in a "Tempest" of controversy. The growth toward good theater can not be realized without a certain amount of opposition. The right kind of opposition, however, is a spur as well as a barb.

Speaking Through Melody

Parkinson's Law in pseudo-economics says that minimum accommodations yield a maximum of effort. One of the best examples of this speculation is the extensive productivity of music organizations on the Middlebury campus. Cramped into a few miniscule practice rooms, and badgered by a lack of soundproofing, music-minded students have demonstrated the creativity born of necessity in small, diverse groups of high musical calibre.

Running through the musical spectrum from jazz combos to string quartets, this agglomeration of musicians, dilettante or dedicated, has given a spontaneous and prolific rendering of man's devotion to self-expression. The size of the groups is an extraneous factor. The choir may fill the chapel lofts, a folk group may claim three stools, but the motive is generically the same—the desire to sing a song, and well.

Although often hampered by lack of opportunities for an audience, music organizations have seldom faltered in the quality of performance. Ballad singer or Vermont Symphony performer, the musician at Middlebury is an exponent and progenitor of an idea basic to a liberal education—the pure enjoyment of the arts.

Skyline, the governing body of Mountain Club, often finds itself up against a curious double image: the rugged-hike-outdoorsmen, and sponsors of more purely social events. To outsiders, Carnival looks like the main reason for the club's existence, but few Skyliners see much of their social calendar's main event—too busy organizing. Alpenstock plays to the partying instinct. But if a Mountain Clubber withstands the long tryout test for promotion to Skyline, he has other than peripheries in mind. Hard work, long hikes and small parties in their mountain cabins are at the core of the club.

They also serve who only sit.

Dance Club

Another success this year for the Dance Club —spinning into sight with its own full length program of interpretive art. It was all a matter of economics, an overwhelming demand curve, stemming from the group's rave notices after their brief appearances in musicales, Midd Nite and the light and airy magic of "The Tempest." The wall mirror in McCullough gym has reflected long hours of practice put in by the leotard-clad girls, now ranking among the campus's leading entertainers.

Forging Chains To Link Worlds

If "outsiders" have heard of Middlebury (Oh, yes, isn't that in New Hampshire?), they know it as a language school. Full-time students, withstanding these frozen steppes, instantly protest the confusion with the summer session, and with good reason.

It would be trite to summon up the words of all those who argue the need for bi-lingual college graduates. Language clubs are a step in the right direction. But they have yet to recognize their own value as a possible focus of interest and source of information for the rest of the campus.

The Muffled Gavel In an Empty Room

It was a sensible move, last year, to abolish the added organizationalism of upper class councils. That there should be no insistence on class solidarity is reasonable—Middlebury seldom means anything as a "college" or a "class," but is remembered in terms of personal associations. The freshmen alone work solidly as a front, and have added substantially to the college pattern by working to abolish the stale council operations imposed upon them by long (and tired) usage.

The Deserved Salute to Excellence

Evaluating election to an honor society is an obscure and thankless job. The thing is so buried under squeals of delight (ooo, you made it) or scornful barbs (yeah, big wheels) that sometimes it is hard to say why the organizations are around at all. When called upon, they do a wide number of jobs for the college and are most definitely a prestige factor, but the personal angle grows equivocal amid the welter of stereotypes.

There is no sense fighting the popular image of any honorary group. But from the inside looking out, any member of the charmed circle owes it to himself to know what he's doing there. Election is neither a goal nor a stepping stone. It recognizes a certain kind of merit that one would have whether officially recognized or not. The carrot before the horse is never a spur to real excellence.

The 1959 football team racked up a better record than any Midd eleven has posted for over ten years. Operating out of a T for the first time, the Panthers tasted defeat only once on their way to a third state title in four years.

The season's opener saw the Panthers down Wesleyan in a wild and wooly affair that wasn't decided until Craig Stewart intercepted a Wesleyan pass in the end zone with less than a minute remaining. The winning score, a fourth period plunge by Dave Barenborg, was set up by a 50 yard Chris Morse-Andy Ferrentino pass play.

The following week saw WPI fall victim 16-9, as Midd's aggressive line play and a goal line stand at the one foot line paved the way for another fourth period win.

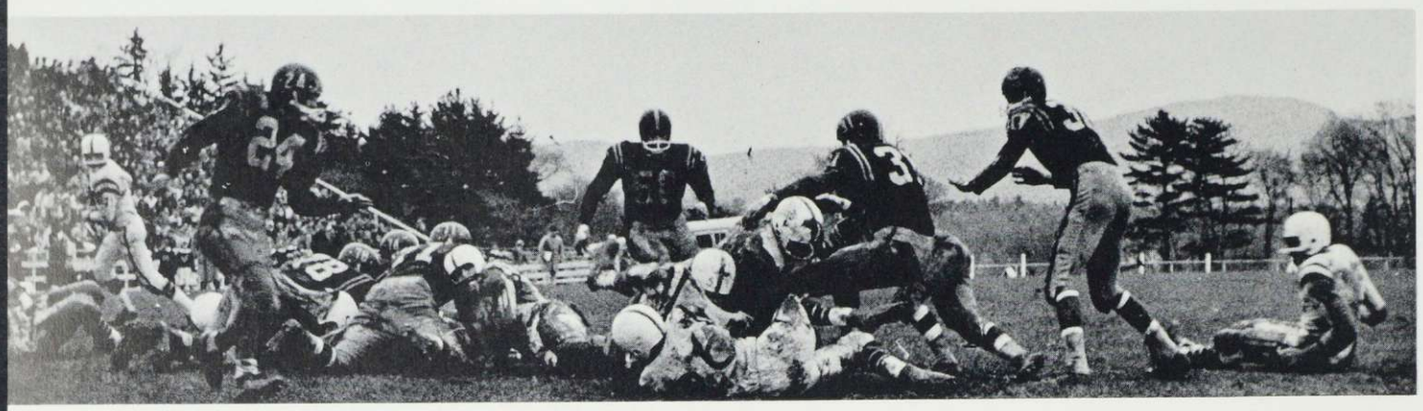
Homecoming saw the only stain on the Panther slate, as Williams outweighed and outplayed the home forces for a 26-8 victory. Midd managed to cross the midfield stripe only once, on a 70 yard Morse-Ferrentino pass play that gave the Panthers a 8-6 halftime edge.

Parents Weekend saw the Panthers bounce right back to take a 14-6 decision from Bates. It was Dick Atkinson's day, as the big senior back scored both touchdowns and gained well over a hundred yards in the debut of Duke's wing T.

The next week RPI went down in a sea of mud as Bob Donner, John Williams, and Atkinson led the Middlebury attack. Fumble recoveries by Herb Thomas and Gary Ardison led to Midd's two touchdowns in the second period.

The first game of the state series ended in complete frustration for both sides. Midd had a scoring play called back in the first period, and a field goal attempt failed at the gun; otherwise, the mud was the only winner.

The finale was all Middlebury, as an underdog Panther squad pushed UVM all over the field for a 28-0 victory. Dave Barenborg climaxed his varsity career with 119 yards and 22 points, and the Midd line broke the Cats' spirit by stopping them one foot from paydirt at the start of the second half. It was an altogether successful way for seven seniors to bow out.



The thunder of the lines is stilled till the next play as a Panther back is brought down.

Soccer Team Sees Top Season

Turning in a fine 6-2 record, the 1959 Panther booters showed themselves a team to be reckoned with in the future, with foul-weather victories over two of New England's top teams.

The squad opened up the year at Union, where they lost to a more practiced team, 3-2, with Jeff Baldwin and George Rubottom getting the Panther goals. The only other loss came three games later, as MIT took a 2-0 decision in a hard-fought contest.

Between these two losses the Panthers kept over .500 by beating Clarkson 6-1 as Rubottom and Tor Hultgreen got two goals apiece, and Plattsburgh 2-1 in double overtime, with Hultgreen getting the winner on a penalty shot.

Then, with the return of coach Joe Morrone, the squad jelled to finish out the season with four straight wins. Albany State fell 5-2 before Middlebury hustle, Vermont cold, and Hultgreen's hat trick. Norwich came out on the short end of a 2-1 count.

Climaxing the season the Panthers downed Coast Guard and Amherst in two rain, wind and mud-swept games, 2-0 and 2-1 as Jerry Detmer played two near-perfect games in the goal. Rallying around Co-Captains Bob Hall and Bruce Richards, and Captain-Elect Hultgreen, the whole team showed that they can play with anyone.

Another Winning Year on Ice

It is a dangerous practice, in any team sport, to identify the fortunes of a team with any one member. But, when you consider that the ultimate object of the game of hockey is to get a hard rubber disk into a net, it is hard to deny that Middlebury's fortunes this year rested mainly on the explosive stick of Phil Latreille, the man who can accomplish this end better than anyone else in the history of collegiate hockey.

Of course, Latreille wasn't the whole show. There were Dicky Morrison and Keith Dollar playing spirited, and Captain Dave Knott steady, defense. There was hockey's only all-brother line, two hustling Junior Frybergers and an outstanding freshman, name of Dates. There were outstanding skaters like Tor Hultgreen and Frankie Coy. There were two crowd-pleasing goalies in Frankie Costanzo and Chuck Gately, and later some sensational net play by freshman John Adden. There was the whole ensemble combining for sixteen wins, highlighted by a 9-6 victory over St. Lawrence. But, most of all, there was Phil Latreille, pumping pucks into enemy nets.

Hard Court Wins Still Elusive

The record of this year's basketball team, 5-16, provides a small but hopeful augury of things to come. This has been its best record in sevral years. Coach "Stub" Mackey did a good job of integrating Freshmen Ken Stone and Bill Dyson with holdovers Charlie Rand, Howie Wiley, and Bill Jackson, and the unit performed smoothly.

The team started off the season with two quick victories, Rand and Wiley leading the way. Seven losses followed, including three at the Springfield Holiday Festival, and a return to the home grounds didn't help any as St. Michael's and UVM beat the Panthers. Possibly the best team effort came when Wesleyan fell, 88-71, and RPI likewise, by 64-58. The next six games found Midd always hustling but still losing, with the Springfield and UVM games undecided until the final minutes. The Panthers then wound up their winning with a Field-House-record 117-82 win over Clarkson.

The year's standout performers were Co-Captains Wiley and Rand, and freshman high scorer Ken Stone. The selection of Wiley for a New England Senior All-Star team was a fitting tribute to his play throughout his Panther career.

Undefeated Again On the Slopes

"Middlebury" is a word attached to "Snow Bowl," which is a phrase implying skiing. Even the authorities realize this, cancelling classes for two days so that everybody can watch the boys who really know how to schuss.

And, this year, they didn't disappoint anybody. After a few practice meets they journeyed to Hanover and came back with a raft of first places: the skimeister crown (resting on Freshman John Bower's brow), and the Dartmouth Outing Club Cup. Outstanding individual performances were Ikky Webber's second in the Downhill and Alpine Combined, and a Bower-Hanscom 1-2 sweep in the jump.

Then, after the Williams Carnival was cancelled for lack of snow during a Vermont snowstorm, the ski Panthers really rolled on their home grounds, taking the Midd Carnival by 40 points, Webber and Bower again leading the way.

And, to wrap up a fine year, the frosh-less squad took the EISA title on great clutch performances by Al Lamson and Lowrie Gibb.

Although the loss of an EISA skimeister hurts, the team should be at least as strong next year. Olympians, you know.

Skiing is a social sport, so since anything social is impossible without girls, Middlebury has a women's ski team. And a pretty good one at that. Undefeated, in fact.

Led in spirit by Fred Neuberger and Captain Sue Goodwin, on the slopes by freshmen Nancy Sise and Elena Bookstrom, and in absentia by Renie Cox and Penny Pitou, the girls first picked up a few individual laurels in meets around New England; then hit the Carnival trail and won every meet that wasn't snowed out. Miss Bookstrom and Miss Sise split the year's skimeister honors between them, with strong backing from Miss Goodwin, Karen Naess, and Lindy Hood.

Ski Patrol Keeps Local Hills Safe

Because of the Snow Bowl, there is a lot of skiing at Middlebury. And where there is a lot of skiing, thre is bound to be a lot of things breaking—skis, poles, ankles, legs . . .

This is where the Ski Patrol comes in. Patrol members, who must have a working knowledge of first aid in addition to being excellent skiers, make frequent runs down the slopes in search of injured skiers. And many a snow bunny will probably agree that the Ski Patrol is possibly the most necessary organization on campus.

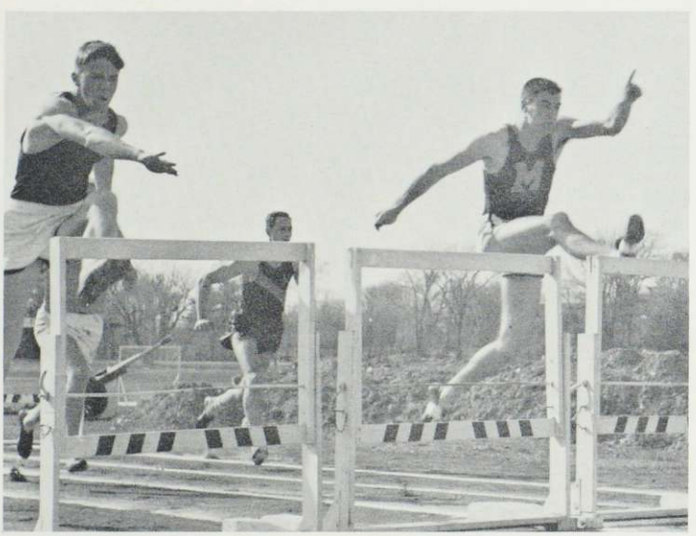
Jim Hansen strains for distance.



A one-two finish for Midd.

The spiked shoe set chalked up its best campaign in many a year, with a 4-1 dual meet record, two new college records, and a fourth place finish in the Easterns. High point of the season was a dual meet win over UVM, the first time a Midd team managed to turn the trick in ten years.

It was also a year of fine individual performances, with the possibility of a new record in every meet. Most interesting was the shot battle, where Dick Atkinson and Ted Parker took turns breaking the record, with Atkinson finally coming out ahead by three inches with a 46′ 2″ heave. Parker kept his name in the record books by getting off the 200′-plus javelin throw which had been predicted for him for four years on the last try of his college career. Also a threat to records every time out were Steve Green, Phil Toomey, Bruce Burnham, Jack McEwan, and Pete Aldrich, who was kept from raising his own pole vault record by a recurring leg injury.

The graduation of Aldrich and Parker, along with consistent pointmen Fred Carbine and Roger Miller, leaves a few holes to be filled. But a host of returning lettermen assures that the team will be stacked in the distances and weights, and with the addition of a sprinter or two the 1960 squad could go undefeated.

A REBUILDING YEAR FOR DIAMONDMEN

If the 1959 baseball team didn't reward spectators with many wins, it did give them some highly interesting baseball. One never knew just what the diamondmen would do next, as they could be shut out one day and bounce back with ten runs the next.

The Panther attack was paced by the bats of Bob Ray, Dick Thomas, and Dave Barenborg, who were on base consistently, but couldn't cross the plate often enough to make up for the runs let in due to an inexperienced pitching staff (Jim Wright was the only veteran starter) and a rash of injuries which left the defense shaky, although it did show flashes of brilliance.

Still, if pitching really is 90% of baseball, the Panthers can look forward to an improvement in 1960, as the whole mound corps will be back for another try, along with all but two of last year's other starters. Bobo's boys can't stay down long.

A ROUGH SEASON FOR LACROSSE

A lack of depth was the main flaw in Joe Morrone's lacrosse team. Following an opening win over Union, they dropped five in a row. The scoreboard, however, doesn't reveal the consistently improving team play, sparked by Chader, Taylor, Mentor, Irwin, and French.

The Williams game was the team's best. Scoring five goals against one of the top ten teams in the country earned the Midd aggregate high praise from the Eph coach. Particularly mentioned for his many fine saves was goalie Rick Rosbeck.

If the spring stickmen continue their steady improvement, they should be a team to beat next year.

A BIRDIE IN THE HAND

The golf clubbers, starting slowly, finished strong to complete a good season, with a few surprises. The team was sparked by the excellent play of Captain Paul Wise and Len Faxon, who compiled outstanding individual match records of 9-1 and 8-2, respectively.

Having a 1-4 record prior to the New England Championships, the Panther team was conceded little chance of finishing near the top.

They upset the predictions by finishing in a third place tie with Wesleyan, and gaining revenge over Williams for an earlier season loss. Len Faxon pushed individual champ Jeff Folley of Wesleyan to the limit before settling for second place.

Next followed a triangular meet with Union and UVM, with Duke's men taking Union 6-1, but losing a sudden-death thriller to UVM, 4-3.

The Vermont State Championships, however, saw Midd reverse this and take the team title for the fourth straight year, with medalist honors going to Len Faxon.

With the continued improvement of Faxon and Ron Stubing, and Captain-elect Mike Closson, wins should come easier to the Panther squad.

RACKETEERS OF 1959

Lockwood Merriman's racketeers had a rebuilding season in 1959, with the emphasis on lowerclassmen. The only returning lettermen to play regularly were Bruce Cameron and Ed Sommers in the number one and two positions. Seniors Dud Livingston and Ed Collier were also impressive in home matches, but found it difficult to travel, with the result that the squad played better at home than it did on the road.

With Captain Cameron leading the way, two victories were recorded over UVM, and the RPI netmen were tied in a rare match which was called on account of darkness. In these matches, as in all others throughout the season, strong performances were turned in by newcomers Art Wilkes and Corky Allen.

The graduation of Cameron, Collier, and Livingston should be offset by the year of experience gained by Wilkes, Allen, and Sherb Merrill, and the return of Ed Sommers, as the Merrimen try to get back on the winning track in 1960.

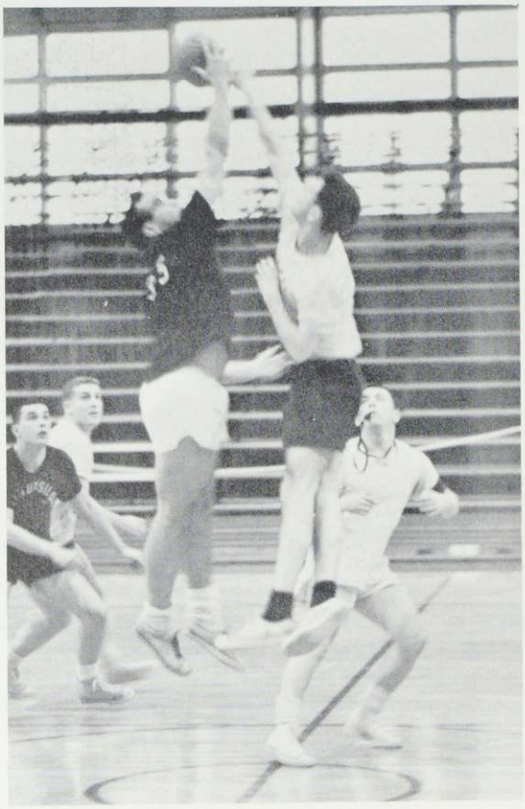
That Intramural Madness . . .



Look Puff look, see Dick jump.

For the intellectually inclined, much of the measure of a school is the "academic extras" it affords. And, in a like manner, it follows that for the athletically inclined, the "athletic extras" are important. This would mean that a good slice of the men's campus at Middlebury have a much happier existence because of Red Kelly's intramural program.

Legend has it that the whole idea got started about 25 years ago, so that those of not-quite-varsity caliber seeking relief from their usual academic pursuits would have an organized reason for beating each other over the head. But legends are always bound to spring up around interesting social phenomena, and are not to be trusted by historians.

The best we can do at present is simply to note that intramurals, like Mt. Everest, are there, that everybody is happy about it, and that the true Olympic spirit—sport for sport's sake—prevails.

And incidentally, that the aforementioned R. Kelly has done a great job of organizing one of New England's best intramural programs.

Don't just stand there, do something.

WRA—The Girls' Intramurals

Athletics are a popular diversion on the women's as well as the men's side of the campus.

And the more official sort of these are run by the W.R.A. (Women's Recreational Association to you), which sponsors team and individual sports on an intramural basis.

A program of inter-collegiate Sports Days let the girls get away for a weekend—or brings Skidmore to Middlebury. Awards go for points and participation—and the team to beat is usually the freshmen.

COED COMPETITIONS

Presenting the only organized coeducational sport on campus, the Yacht Club, under Commodore Joe Cusimano, sponsors intramural meets for fun and competition. From these Dunmore outings—a sort of grassing on water—a team is chosen to represent Middlebury in intercollegiate competitions, where our less fortunate brethren on such sailing teams as Dartmouth's can wish that they had a crew like that. And just to dispel any doubts anyone may have as to whether sailors are really sociable people, the Yacht Club is responsible for the Commodore's Ball, a fall social highlight. The Navy was never like this!

New Pillars, Doric Order

The Pan-Hellenic Council and the Interfraternity Council are two campus organizations which are similar in purpose, although different in influence. IFC has long held a more prominent position on the men's campus than Pan-Hell has on the other side of the street. In the past few years the place of Pan-Hell and IFC in campus life has remained virtually the same. Now, however, Middlebury's whole fraternity system is faced with the possibility of a curriculum change which will affect all aspects of collegiate life by making greater academic demands of the student. Granting that Saturday night social centers are necessary in our thriving hamlet, the administration is setting out to evaluate how well the Greeks serve the general scheme for the future of Middlebury. It is up to future Councils to devise a fraternity system that will provide Middlebury men and women with recreation without detracting from the main purpose of higher education.

The Middlebury Airlift: Imported Intellect

The woods are lovely, dark, and deep—and singularly devoid of intelligent arguments. A thinking man's romantic may find that Nature asks him some essential questions, but those sermons in stones haven't been coming up with many answers lately. From its mountainous retreat, Middlebury College reaches out for artists and thinkers who can present a point of view on the favorite paradoxes of this generation.

Lectures and programs slide along the scale from well-considered ideas to mediocre mouthings. A spirit of contradiction ran through the Religion Conference, a skepticism sparked by those who looked for a positive program to couple with the churchmen's ideals of racial brotherhood. Many suspected that the art of Josh White came closer to offering a human answer. The rush for seats to hear Robert Frost spoke for itself.

But an undaunted Nature keeps her hat in the ring by piling up ski slopes, a form of Payola designed to diminish the audiences of mere human spokesmen.

The Multiple Personality of Carnival

Carnival is a study in schizophrenia. Whether it is viewed as an alcoholic double image or a split personality phenomenon of sports vs. socializing, the Long, Long Weekend has, if we anthropomorphize a bit, definite characteristics of a personality on the Freudian Fringe.

Indeed, the frenetic hoop-la can often be contagious. With the right proportions of mundane hooch and Olympic nectar, the incautious imbiber can achieve without visible effort, a state which would make any perceptive head-shrinker pull out his note pad and dust his couch.

As in our pseudo-psychological simile, the distinction between fun and frenzy is clouded. The line between indulgence which leaves an emotional hangover or a distinct sense of well-being is, however, of one's own choosing.

The faces of carnival are as many as those who experience it. There will always be the die-hard contingent of scoffers, as well as those who can talk themselves into the idea that they're having fun. There are the unabashed drunkards, the snow-mad ski fiends, the ingenuous, the supercilious. But Carnival is one's own. What one makes of it is, in the main, a function of one's own ability to find the fun where it is, not where the stereotype tells you.

Education: A Private, Muted Crisis

The secret word for 1960 was Education. Small groups huddled over coffee to debate the EPC recommendation, while professors defended their jobs, students their fraternities and trustees their pocketbooks. The four-course question lay low, consequent to a faculty vote of silence on the subject. Still, rumors of determined dissention spread to undergraduate ears.

Into the midst of this "agonizing" reappraisal, Conference tossed its topic: "The Crisis in U.S. Education." Livened by a Kennedy campaign telegram, the conclave debated its way through a collection of general and practical topics, all brought home to conference-goers in small discussion sections. (Kudos to the minds that added those private sessions to the weekend.)

The next step: to find out (despite the vote of silence) how much effect Conference had on the state of Middlebury's private crisis.

What Mad Pursuit

Where's the third monkey?

What men or gods are these?
What maidens loth?
What mad pursuit?
What struggle to escape?
What pipes and timbrels?
What wild ecstasy?

'Twas the time of the Queen's coronation, and all the counts and no-'counts had gathered to celebrate the coming of spring. Grassing plots had been abandoned, the cooling kegs were all neglected now, the fading echoes floated through deserted halls, everyone heard the brassy clarion call. That wild wailing sound issued forth from Louis' horn. The silver slippered feet began to move (this is cool, cat, like now we're in the groove!). The high priest of sound began to swing into the ritual of rhythm. On light fantastic toe (primitive, man!) tripped a vestal virgin, (and go, gal, go!). The music grew louder, spirits surged, spring could sleep no longer.

Blow

'Twas the night of the Queen's coronation. The whole company gathered round at that same shrine now to praise with song and dance their goddess new and fair. Pipes and timbrels proclaimed the advent of the Queen. O'er all the jeweled company her glance now gave delight. (But, Dad, you've lost the beat!) Now let us sport us while we may—the age old cry of Mother Earth is heard; the air is filled with jubilant cries. The frolic wind, the flowers fair, all seem to beckon youths and maidens. But are these maidens loth? Just who is chasing whom? The youthful revelry goes on. And on and on—the kegs are tapped, jollity mounts, merriment reigns supreme.

What men or gods are these? What maidens now returning all? In joyfulness they wander on their homeward way full of the spirit of spring.

What wild ecstasy!

And So It Ends

And so it ends. Four years out of a life—
A short time as lives go, but then why
Measure that life in terms of years alone?
It was a period unto itself,
Really, never before and not again
Will four years mean so much.

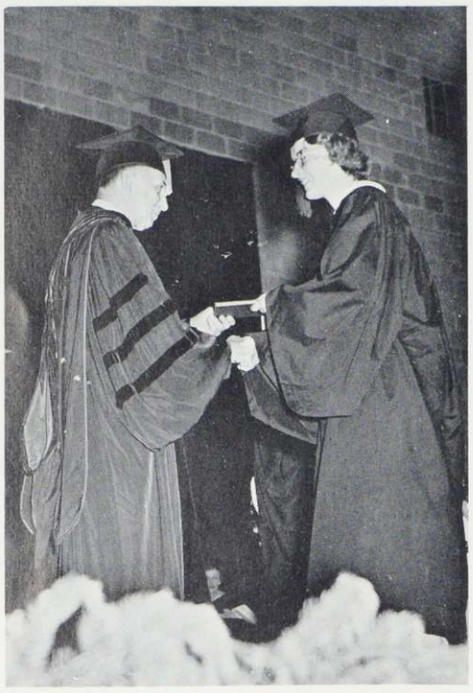
That long last look



Ready . . .

Much has been said
Already about what it means—some bad,
Some good, most mediocre, and the rub
Is that what once was good has now become
Cliché. That sheepskin changes many things,
Supposedly, and yet ironically,
It cannot seem to change the fact that we
Can not quite say just what it means to us.

Head of the line

"Symbol of education." "Just reward."
"End of a chapter." "Gateway to success."
"A chance to test the knowledge and insight
Which we have gained here in the outside world."
"A parting that means sadness." "Step down from
The field house platform to the great unknown,
To freedom and responsibility."
Solid old cliches. Yet who denies
Their truth? Let's just admit that there
Is something indefinable about it,
A meaning beyond what we can put in words:
That the whole, somehow, exceeds the sum
Of all its parts. That these four years
Will add, or multiply, to more than that.
And sometime far from now, while dusting off
Old memories, we may decide that all
That Middlebury means can be summed up
Concisely after all, if we can look
Back at the years themselves, and their effects,
And find that we can say, and mean it, "That Was good."

"It was a toss-up between Middlebury College and Miami U."

Stacy Lloyd and friends.

The class of 1960 has occupied a unique position in the recent history of Middlebury College. During our tenure, we have been deeply involved in a transitional process from old to new, a phenomenon which has affected all aspects of our college society. Faculty-student opinion and initiative have been stimulated by the controversy over the proposed four-course curriculum. Self-government has become a reality with the creation of the Undergraduate Association. Socially, we have watched with apprehension the elimination of student apartments and sophomore cars. Athletically, we have seen our teams achieve unusual success, with the skiers reaching Eastern supremacy. Our indebtedness to the college cannot be expressed; we only hope our contribution has been valuable to the Middlebury ideal.

Tuesday night, 9:45.

"Hey Magoo! What a neat mushroom-shaped cloud!"

As the class of 1960 graduates and leaves Middlebury, we know that we are leaving a college that has grown to meet student needs. We, too, as a class and as individuals, have had to grow to meet the demands of the College. The result, we hope, is maturity.

We have watched and cheered our classmates Penny Pitou and Renie Cox, who represented the United States at the Winter Olympics. Our class provided three guides for the World's Fair in 1958. Robert Frost has spoken twice in the four years we have been here.

These four years are now in the past. The future is unknown, but it does "belong to those who prepare for it," and Middlebury has given us a basis for this preparedness.
